Description of Program

The Phlebotomy program is designed to prepare students for employment as phlebotomists in a variety of healthcare settings. Phlebotomists are responsible for drawing blood from patients or donors to enable medical laboratory testing. The program emphasizes both theoretical knowledge and practical skills, including safe and efficient techniques for obtaining blood specimens from adults, children, and neonates. Students also learn proper specimen labeling, preparation of blood smears, medical terminology, and specimen transportation procedures. Through the integration of classroom instruction and hands-on training, the program equips students with the competencies needed to work in hospital laboratories, blood centers, and other healthcare facilities.

Individuals who do not meet this requirement are classified as non-Florida residents and are subject to a higher tuition rate.
