Description of Program

The Surgical Technology program is designed to prepare students for employment as surgical technologists in a variety of healthcare environments, including hospitals, sterile processing departments, central supply units, ambulatory surgical centers, and physicians' offices. Surgical technologists play a vital role in the operating room by preparing surgical instruments and equipment, maintaining a sterile environment, and assisting surgeons during procedures. The curriculum covers essential topics such as aseptic techniques, operating room preparation, patient care procedures, surgical technology protocols, patient safety, and CPR. In addition to classroom instruction, students gain valuable hands-on clinical experience, which involves standing for extended periods and working in high-pressure situations. This integration of theory and practice ensures that graduates are well-prepared to sit for a national certification examination and begin their careers in surgical technology.
